

To Whom It May Concern,

I am pleased to recommend Ofri Azriel as a candidate for the Student Exchange Program.

I taught Ofri in the course Designer as Image-Maker during the first semester of her second year at the School of Visual Communication. Ofri is an outstanding student with particularly strong abilities in image-making, composition, conceptual development, and the execution of complex visual communication processes.

The course in which I taught Ofri presents students with demanding and complex challenges, requiring them to develop ideas, engage with abstraction, demonstrate conceptual and visual openness, and translate creative processes into precise visual outcomes. Throughout the course, Ofri underwent a meaningful and in-depth learning process that demonstrated her ability to engage with complex creative challenges.

Throughout this process, she demonstrated curiosity, collaboration, and openness to abstract and conceptual approaches. She was able to receive criticism, reconsider her work, and respond in ways that were surprising, independent, and thoughtful. Particularly impressive was her ability to combine a genuine willingness to learn and develop with a strong commitment to her own distinctive visual and conceptual perspective.

In my view, a good designer is not expected to simply follow instructions, but rather to listen, respond, and develop through dialogue while remaining true to her own voice and this is something in which Ofri particularly excelled.

Beyond her professional abilities, Ofri also stood out for her personal qualities: she is pleasant, respectful, responsible, and brings a positive spirit to the working environment.

I am confident that Ofri will benefit greatly from the student exchange experience and will represent the School of Visual Communication and Israel's emerging generation of young designers with distinction.

I would be happy to answer any further questions regarding Ofri.

Sincerely,
Rachel Dahan

rachel.dahan@gmail.com

To Whom It May Concern,

I am pleased to recommend Ofri Azriel for the Student Exchange Program. I taught Ofri in the Typography 3 course during the first semester of her second year at the School of Visual Communication at Shenkar.

From our very first meetings, Ofri stood out for her natural sensitivity to typography and her ability to understand visual systems in depth. She demonstrated a genuine interest in the field, intellectual curiosity, and a continuous desire to learn, explore, and develop qualities that were consistently reflected in her work throughout the course.

Ofri has an impressive ability to analyze work critically and accurately. She knows how to identify what is not working, understand why, and propose thoughtful and in-depth ways to improve it. At the same time, she demonstrates great creativity and the ability to arrive at original and precise solutions that are not based on grand gestures, but rather on sensitive, refined, and focused thinking. She is not satisfied with the first solution that emerges, but continues to examine, test, refine, and sharpen her work until she reaches a complete and convincing result. The small details that make up her working process are evident in every exercise she submitted.

Beyond her professional abilities, Ofri was an active and meaningful participant in the learning environment in class. She contributed to discussions, participated in examining design approaches, and was willing to assist her peers through constructive and thoughtful criticism. Her contribution enriched the discourse in the classroom and created a productive learning environment for everyone.

Sincerely,
Roni Schneider
Lecturer, School of Visual Communication
Shenkar

